What's There to Think About When Buying a New Garbage Disposal? In a Word: Plenty!

Once upon a time, you could buy a garbage disposal with relative ease, as there just weren't that many factors to consider. Brand name? That's a good one. Price? Always, as who wants to overpay? Add in grinding power and a couple of other odds and ends, and your parameters were pretty well mapped out for you.

Well, as the plumbing industry continues to evolve, so have garbage disposals, which means today, you have more options than ever, such as the following:

What's that you're planning to grind?

There are two types of garbage disposals, continuous feed and batch feed. A continuous feed disposal will let you continue to add food waste while the unit is operating. With a batch speed disposal, you must fill the grinding chamber first, then put the cover on and turn it to activate the motor.

You can also find one stage, two stage, and three stage garbage disposals, with one stage being the most common. Still, two and three stage units will allow you to grind up certain types of foods you've always been told to keep out of your disposal, such as potato skins or fibrous foods like celery. That's because they grind up food waste to the point that it's virtually liquefied, thus reducing the chance of clogging or jamming.

Green & Healthy Living Tips

Struggling with weight loss? In addition to keeping hunger in check, eating protein at every meal helps to keep body composition – the amount of fat relative to muscle – in better proportion. Along with calcium and D, protein helps you to preserve muscle mass as you drop pounds.

What's it made of?

The grinding wheel that actually cuts up the food waste is usually made from either galvanized steel or stainless steel. The grinding chamber may be made from galvanized steel, stainless steel or even plastic. Galvanized steel is a durable material but it can rust over time. Stainless steel provides strength and durability along with superior corrosion resistance. A plastic grinding chamber will never rust or corrode, but if it is poorly made, it may be susceptible to cracking.

Septic vs. sewer models

Septic garbage disposals use a high speed motor to grind the waste into fine particles and also may have an additive that injects microorganisms into the waste stream to encourage breakdown in the septic tank.

A lot to think about, wouldn't you say? And yet, that's just one more reason to trust Your 1 Plumber when it's time to replace your garbage disposal. First of all, we repair all makes and models. We also carry all types and sizes and will recommend what we think makes the most sense for your home, lifestyle, and more.

Today, we invite you to save $25 on either garbage disposal repair or a brand new unit with the coupon on page of this issue of Close to Home.

We look forward to our next opportunity to serve you.
